

Who is Homeless?

Key Provisions

- The term homeless is broadly defined by the McKinney-Vento Act's Education for Homeless Children and Youth Program.
- Pre-school children, migrant children, and youth whose parents will not permit them to live at home or who have run away from home (even if their parents are willing to have them return home) may be identified as homeless.

Homelessness is a lack of permanent housing resulting from extreme poverty. Two trends are largely responsible for the rise in homelessness over the past 15–20 years: a growing shortage of affordable rental housing and a simultaneous increase in poverty. There is an increasing gap between income and housing costs for low-income individuals. A minimum wage worker cannot afford the fair-market rent for housing in any jurisdiction in the United States. To afford the national median fair market rent for a two-bedroom rental unit, a minimum wage worker would need to work 97 hours per week.

Yet, despite the obvious need, the supply of affordable housing has dwindled. By 1995, the number of low-income renters in America outstripped the number of low-cost rental units by 5.4 million units. The lack of affordable housing has resulted in an increase in the number of employed people who become homeless. A survey of 30 U.S. cities found that almost one in four homeless persons is employed.

The changing character of homelessness means that children and youth in homeless situations often do not fit society's stereotypical images. Only 33% of students experiencing homelessness live in shelters. Most students share housing with friends or relatives or stay in motels or other temporary facilities. Yet, these children and youth may not immediately be considered homeless and are sometimes denied the protections and services of the McKinney-Vento Act. Therefore, the Act now contains a specific definition of homelessness that includes a broad array of inadequate living situations. This definition can help educators and families understand who is entitled to the Act's protections.

The issue brief entitled Identifying Students in Homeless Situations found in Appendix G provides strategies to locate and serve children and youth living in a variety of homeless situations. Consult other issue briefs in this series for legal provisions and implementation strategies to ensure children and youth in homeless situations can choose their school, enroll in school immediately, access transportation services, have disputes resolved quickly and access Title I and other educational services.

Note: All definitions are contained in McKinney-Vento Act sec. 725(2); 42 U.S.C. 11435(2).
